Researching a Historic Property

The mission of the Department of the Interior is to protect and provide access to our Nation's natural and cultural heritage and honor our trust responsibilities to tribes.

This material is partially based upon work conducted under a cooperative agreement with the National Conference of State Historic Preservation Officers and the U.S. Department of the Interior.

Date of publication: 1991; revised 1998.

House at 2437 Fifteenth Street, N.W.

The house at 2437 Fifteenth Street, N.W. in Washington, DC is significant for its architectural design of 1927, a product of the prominent Washington architect of the early 20th century, George Oakley Totten, Jr. In addition, the house is significant for its role in the development of the thoroughfare along and parallel to 16th Street north of the White House with large, elegant embassies and private homes. Documentary sources for this property include building permits, deeds, and interviews. (Gary Griffin, Washington, DC)

Garden Homes Historic District

This historical view of the Garden Homes development in Milwaukee, Wisconsin shows the early years of what is considered to be the nation's first municipally-sponsored, community-owned housing project. Constructed between 1921 and 1923, it was based on the "garden city" model of Letchworth, England. The collection of simple, two-story cottages was documented through daily newspapers, periodicals, building permits, and city directories. (Milwaukee Public Library)

Dr. Samuel D. Risley House

Located in Media, Delaware County, Pennsylvania, the 1877 Dr. Samuel D. Risley House combines elements of the Gothic Revival and the Norman styles. The house is significant for its architecture, described as "a strikingly impressive eclectic house, combining themes from several popular 19th century picturesque styles." The house was documented through local histories, local daily newspapers, family genealogies and Philadelphia city directories. (Leslie B. Potter, Glen Mills, PA)

Ritzville Historic District

This commercial street in Ritzville, Adams County, Washington represents the period in the community's history when it was the world's greatest wheat entrepot. Developed during the late 19th/early 20th century, Ritzville was a booming agricultural trade center in the heart of a fertile wheat growing belt. The surviving commercial thoroughfare, a coherent group of buildings from that specific era in history, forms the National Register-listed Ritzville Historic District. The documentary sources for this nomination include county histories, local magazines and local daily newspapers, and insurance maps. I. INTRODUCTION

The purpose of this bulletin is to introduce the beginner to some basic sources and techniques for the collection of data for nominating a historic property to the National Register of Historic Places. This guide is to be used with the bulletin entitled How to Complete the National Register Registration Form, which explains terminology, and how the information gathered through research is incorporated in a National Register nomination. While the National Register lists buildings, sites, districts, structures, and objects, this bulletin focuses on individual buildings. It may be applicable to other resource types—especially structures—and districts composed mainly of buildings.

Before you begin your research, contact the State Historic Preservation Officer (SHPO) of the State in which the property is located. The State will provide you with the appropriate forms, instructions, and guidance about the State's procedures for nominating properties to the National Register. The SHPO will also provide a copy of the State's inventory documentation if the property has already been surveyed. The SHPO is an important source of information about significant historic contexts and documentation that may be useful to you for researching your historic property. Finally, that office will be able to tell you if your community has a preservation official or office that you should contact. A complete list of State Historic Preservation Officers is located in Appendix IX of How to Complete the National Register Registration Form.

Additional information may be available from local landmarks and historic district commissions, particularly if the community in which your property is located is a Certified Local Government (CLG). Local governments frequently collect information about landmark properties, historic districts, and archeological sites. If the property being researched is owned by the U.S. Government, the Federal Preservation Officer (FPO) should be contacted for information as well. The SHPO can refer you to the relevant FPO for the agency involved.

Hyde Park Historic District

This view of the Hyde Park Historic District illustrates a street scene from one of the earliest suburban subdivisions in Austin, Travis County, Texas. Established in 1891, the subdivision developed well into the first decades of the 20th century with bungalow houses. The bungalow reflected the progressive aspirations of the middle class and the availability of pattern books and mail-order house plans. This National Register historic district was documented through Sanborn Maps, real estate records, and estate records. (Daniel Hardy, Austin, Texas)

II. RESEARCH AND THE NATIONAL REGISTER FORM

Researching a historic property for National Register nomination differs from researching a property for other purposes. Information collected must be directed at determining the property's historical significance. When evaluating a property against National Register criteria, significance is defined as the importance of a property to the history, architecture, archeology, engineering, or culture of a community, a State, or the nation. Significance may be based on association with historical events (Criterion A); association with a significant person (Criterion B); distinctive physical characteristics of design, construction, or form (Criterion C); and potential to yield important information (Criterion D).

Every National Register nomination must place a property in its historic context to support that property's significance. Historic context means information about the period, the place, and the events that created, influenced, or formed the backdrop to the historic resources. The discussion of historic context should describe the history of the community where the property is located as it relates to the history of the property.

Two other considerations affect evaluation of significance: association and period of significance. Association refers to the direct connection between the property and the area of significance for which it is nominated. For a property to be significant under historic events (Criterion A), the physical structure must have been there to "witness" the event or series of events; they must have actually occurred on the nominated property. For a property to be significant for an association with an individual (Criterion B), the individual should have lived, worked, or been on the premises during the period in which the person accomplished the activities for which the individual is considered significant. Period of significance refers to the span of time during which significant events and activities occurred. Events and associations with historic properties are finite; most properties have a clearly definable period of significance.

Lastly, a property is evaluated for its integrity: the authenticity of physical characteristics from which properties obtain their significance. When properties retain historic material and form, they are able to convey their association with events, people, and designs from the past. All buildings change over time. Changes do not necessarily mean that a building is not eligible; but, if it has radical changes, it may no longer retain enough historic fabric, and may not be eligible for the National Register. Historic integrity is the composite of seven qualities: location, design, setting, materials, workmanship, feeling and association.

The National Register nomination form records the property at the time

Panhorst Feed Store

The Panhorst Feed Store in St. Clair, Franklin County, Missouri was constructed in 1917-18. It is significant as "emblematic of a type of construction common among small towns in the 19th and early 20th century." This vernacular commercial building developed in the community, whose economy was based on mining, lumber, and agriculture. It was documented through local newspapers and personal interviews. (James Evans, Department of Natural Resources, State of Missouri) of its listing and justifies how the property qualifies for National Register listing. In addition, the form contains other data elements that should be reviewed before research is initiated. They include the location, size, and boundaries of the property; category and numbers of contributing resources; historic and current functions; architectural classification and materials; area and period of significance; and bibliography.

One of the most challenging tasks of research is knowing when you have gathered enough material. You are ready to complete the National Register nomination form when the following questions can be answered:

- What was the property called at the time it was associated with the important events or persons, or took on its important physical character that gave it importance?

- How many buildings, structures, and other resources make up the property?
- When was the property constructed and when did it attain its current form?
- What are the property's historic characteristics?
- What changes have been made over time and when? How have these affected its historic integrity?
- What is the current condition of the property, including the exterior, grounds, setting, and interior?
- How was the property used during its period of significance and how is it used today?
- Who occupied or used the property historically? Did they individually make any important contributions to history? Who is its current owner?
- Was it associated with important events, activities, or persons?
- Which National Register criteria apply to the property? In what areas of history is the property significant?
- How does the property relate to the history of the community where it is located?
- How does the property illustrate any themes or trends important to the history of its community, State, or nation?
- How large is the property, where is it located, or what are its boundaries?
- Would this property more appropriately be nominated as part of a historic district?

III. RESEARCH HINTS

Organize research tasks in an efficient and logical fashion. Decide what you need to know and where you can find it. Make a list of the questions you must answer. Make a list of specific tasks, noting where you need to go, to whom you need to speak, and what you expect to find, and the order in which you intend to proceed. Determine your possibilities and limitations. You can save yourself time and effort by defining the parameters of your project in advance. You can alter, discard, or add questions to tasks as you proceed. Once you know exactly what you need to find, and have a good idea where to find it, you are well on your way to accomplishing your goal.

Remember that the property itself is a primary source of information. Walk through the property and gather information that describes it, noting distinctive features and obvious alterations and changes. Examine all buildings and structures, inside as well as out. Examine the grounds, noting any signs of previous buildings or activities (foundations, wells, etc.), and roadways, paths, vegetation, fences, and other features.

Identify what historic information is readily available, perhaps in the collections of the owners, a neighbor, or the community. As early as possible, establish the construction date for the property. This date may help establish an earliest beginning date for your period of significance. In addition, try to discover the names of the persons who owned or lived in the property, or for a business or institution, the names by which the property has been known through its history. With this information, you are less likely to overlook information under an unfamiliar name. Examine your property in relation to the historic events and development of the community of which it is a part to determine the context in which it is significant. Gather and record this general information as you gather the specific facts about your property.

Contact all organizations and institutions holding source materials well in advance of the time of your visit. Organize and write down the questions you want to ask before you make your initial contact. Keep notes of all conversations. Explain exactly what you wish to accomplish. Determine the hours and procedures for using special collections, archives, and other records. Make arrangements with the person most knowledgeable about the collection you wish to use, so that you do not arrive at the facility to discover the person you need to see is unavailable.

Explain to the research facility personnel exactly when you wish to arrive, how long you will be able to stay, and exactly what you wish to see. In this way, the material will be ready for you. In addition, you may be pleasantly surprised to discover the material you need can be sent on interlibrary loan to your local library. Talk to the staff, especially reference people, archivists, and librarians. They may have fresh ideas or leads to suggest, and may be able to resolve confusion. Bear in mind that they will guide your efforts but will not do your research for you.

Identify and follow any special rules and requirements for using a collection beforehand, e.g., no photographs, no photocopying, no tape recording, note-taking with a soft pencil only, photocopy costs, what you may or may not be allowed to bring, hours for special staff, etc.

Examine information thoroughly before reading it. Review table of contents, indices, and any accompanying research guides or "finding aids" prepared by staff. Do you need to go through every piece of paper? Can you skip some sections of the book? Is this publication really what you thought it was when you requested it? Did you get everything you requested? Learn how to use the directories, guides, indices, files, catalogs, and publications lists for various collections. Explore general guides to archival materials, manuscript collections, dissertations, and photographic collections for additional sources that may help you in your research.

Record consistently the documentation and sources of information from your research. Use a standard bibliographical style such as that found in A Manual of Style or A Manual for Writers by Kate L. Turabian, both published by the University of Chicago Press.

Kehlbeck Farmstead

The Kehlbeck Farmstead in rural Cass County, Nebraska represents a rare surviving cluster of domestic agricultural buildings and structures associated with the farming history of southeast Nebraska of the late 19th/early 20th century. Its domestic character is enhanced by a rare allée of pruned cedar trees that form part of the decorative and functional landscaping of the homestead. This property was documented largely through college and university research papers. (Joni Gilkerson, Nebraska State Historical Society)

IV. GENERAL GUIDE TO SOURCES

When researching a property, both primary (original and archival) and secondary sources should be used. The following list includes both primary and secondary sources.

¹ Federal census records generally are released to the public seventy-five years after the census is taken.

- The earliest Federal census available is 1790.

- Most Federal census records prior to 1880 do not contain house addresses.

- The regular 1890 census was destroyed by fire. However, some special census schedules are available, including information on surviving Union veterans of the Civil War for certain states.

- Check the availability of State censuses. More recent and detailed data are available for some states.

² One caution about deed information: when the deed goes back to the 1700s or early 1800s, you cannot automatically assume that the structure you are investigating is the same one referred to in the earliest deed. The original structure may have been destroyed, and you may be investigating a replacement built at a later date.

⁴ Old maps are important sources of information about the location of a structure and its immediate surroundings at a given date. They are useful for dating buildings and additions. Some city atlases (e.g. Sanborn or Baist) are at a scale to indicate approximate dimensions. They often show the position of utilities, grade levels, types of construction, and the height of buildings. The accuracy of maps varies, and sometimes they depict proposed improvements that were never built, or that were built in a different manner. Even recent maps may contain significant facts about historic properties.

V. ADDITIONAL SOURCES

Local, regional, and State libraries with collections pertaining to local and regional history, city directories, genealogical collections, photograph collections, and newspapers on microfilm. Inquire about interlibrary loans from distant libraries.

Local and regional branches of the National Archives: census data, Federal survey maps, and guides to collections.

Museums; local, regional, county, and State historical societies and museum associations, for valuable publications, files, tours, photograph collections, architectural history collections, local histories, and ephemera.

State Archives and Records Management Offices sometimes contain county assessor's property tax records, as well as other information.

Statewide or nationwide historical and genealogical societies.

Statewide historic preservation organizations.

Universities and colleges: photograph collections, architectural history collections, map and periodical collections, and manuscripts and archives collections. Some universities and colleges have preservation or architecture programs. Frequently, their students will have done surveys of local resources and local history as class projects. They may also be a good source of suggestions about further research possibilities for your specific property.

Osgood Family House

Constructed circa 1810, the Osgood Family House is an excellent example of a Federal style house in Fryeburg, Oxford County, Maine. The house was documented through a county historic resource survey. (Kirk F. Mahney, Maine Historic Preservation Commission)

It should be stressed that much of what is known is still in private ownership. Interviewing past or present property owners, long-time residents, or former staff or employees is often one of the best means of locating information. Very often historical societies, museums, genealogical societies, and pioneer associations can be helpful in locating previous owners or their descendants. Manuscripts, papers, scrapbooks, diaries, and private photograph albums are often the most valuable sources you can investigate.

VI. ARCHITECTURAL RECORDS

Cooperative Preservation of Architectural Records (COPAR)
Prints and Photographs Division
Library of Congress
Washington, DC 20540

A national center for information on architectural records throughout the United States. COPAR directs researchers to repositories in all states.

Historic American Buildings Survey/
Historic American Engineering
Record (HABS/HAER)
U.S. Department of the Interior
National Park Service
1849 "C" Street, NW
Washington, DC 20240

Records for more than 25,000 historic buildings and structures. The HABS/HAER collection is reproducible and copyright free. Records are accessible at, and may be ordered from, the Library of Congress, Prints and Photographs Division, Washington, DC, 20540.
